Ball and Pompon dahlias are known for their perfectly round blooms formed by countless tightly rolled petals. Pompon dahlias are characterized by their charming and delicate blooms that grow up to 2" in diameter. Ball dahlias share the same round shape but have slightly more open petals and their blooms range up to 6" in diameter. Both types are easy to grow and have strong stems that are less sensitive for tipping over. They bloom abundantly and are currently the most popular dahlias for cut flowers but also well suited for borders.

Winter hardy in USDA zones 8-11.

All dahlias must be lifted before the first frost, to be stored indoors and replanted in the next spring.

All dahlias are resistant to deer and rodents.

These specialty dahlias do not look like dahlias on first sight. Collarette dahlias have a disc of flat or cupped petals, similar to a daisy. Their open center is surrounded by a collar of shorter petals, often in a contrasting color.

Anemone dahlias (or Powder Puff dahlias) are typed by a pin cushion shaped centre, surrounded by a ring of reflexed petals. They are gaining in popularity as border and container plants and we can definitely see why! This class of dahlias is specially beloved by both bees and butterflies.

Winter hardy in USDA zones 8-11.

All dahlias must be lifted before the first frost, to be stored indoors and replanted in the next spring.

All dahlias are resistant to deer and rodents.

Dinnerplates are our most popular class of dahlias: their massive blooms truly set them apart.

They are in fact Decorative type dahlias with huge flower heads that can grow up to 12" in diameter.

Dinnerplate dahlias make impressive border plants and are also well suited for cut flowers.

For the blooms to reach their best potential it is essential to regularly pinch, dehead dead flowers and stake the plants to protect the heavy flowers from wind or rain.

Winter hardy in USDA zones 8-11.

All dahlias must be lifted before the first frost, to be stored indoors and replanted in the next spring.

All dahlias are resistant to deer and rodents.

The Irisses offered in this section are all late spring and summer blooming perennials grown from rhizomes. These Irisses are landscape plants for the water garden and near ponds and streams. The Iris plant's flowering intensity often decreases after 3-5 years. By dividing the roots the perennials are stimulated to produce new Iris flowers. Most types are hardy but the Siberian type is more sensitive to cold and needs to be protected by a winter cover.

Hardy to zone 4.

Astilbe perform best in a fertilized , well drained spot with light shade. They do need lots of moisture, to prevent the fern-like foliage from turning brown.

Astilbe benefit from being divided every few years. The feathery blooms make lovely companions in garden borders and are popular cut flowers for bouquets.

Peonies can be grown in zones 3-8.

They like rich, fertile, well drained ground and prefer full sun.

If planted too deeply it will only produce foliage.
